

Contempt in court

And so because you will not confess to being an artificial entity and a fictional UK citizen, the government agent and public servant otherwise known as a judge/magistrate decides to threaten you with contempt. So you could ask;

- “Sir, for and on the record, what type of contempt; civil or criminal?”

Now civil contempt would require a contract/agreement to perform. If a contract does not exist then there is no agreement for performance.

- Sir, for and on the record, could you please show me the contract requiring my performance in this matter?
- Sir, could you please show me the claim?
- Sir, for and on the record, how am I in contempt of a contract?
- Sir, can you show me where I have a contract with the court that obligates me to perform?

Now criminal contempt would need an injured party and a claim.

- Sir, for and on the record, it is my understanding that for criminal contempt there needs to be a claim and an injured party; can you please show me the injured party and who is making the claim?

Now a favourite trick of the servants wearing black robes is to attempt to block you from asking questions. If they try this, be calm and get everything on the record.

- For and on the record sir, are you refusing to allow me to question the courts authority?
- For and on the record sir, I do not understand and I believe that you need my understanding before you can lawfully proceed in this matter; is this not correct?
- For and on the record sir, how does a question that aims to seek clarity of a fact, procedure or issue of law become contempt?

Always keep calm, no matter how angry or threatening the public skivvy sitting in a high chair becomes. Remember that everything centres on money and accounting, so you can always ask for the penal sum of the contempt charge in question. Contempt like any other charge has a sum attached, so ask for it, accept it for value and return it for settlement.

Remember the legal world exists in the public fiction, and that you are a real, sovereign private man/woman and the Sponsor of the Credit. Without your consent and signature commerce, the legal system and their funny little secretive world would cease to exist.
